

Drop Shipping Policy

Drop shipping, or allowing a third-party to fulfill orders to customers on your behalf, is not acceptable unless it is clear to the customer that you are the seller of record ~~is generally acceptable. If you intend to fulfill orders using a drop shipper, you must always:~~

~~Be the seller of record of your products;~~

~~Identify yourself as the seller of your products on all packing slips and other information included or provided in connection with them;~~

~~Be responsible for accepting and processing customer returns of your products; and~~

The following examples of drop shipping are policy violations that may result in a restriction of your ability to sell using Amazon's Merchant Fulfilled Network (MFN) ~~Comply with all other terms of your seller agreement and applicable Amazon policies.~~

Examples of drop shipping that is not permitted:

- Purchasing products from another online retailer and having that retailer ship directly to customers, if the shipment does not identify you as the seller of record or if anyone other than you (including the online retailer) appears on packing slips, invoices, or external packaging, it is strictly prohibited without exception; or
- Shipping orders with packing slips, invoices, external packaging, or other information indicating a seller name or contact information other than your own is also strictly prohibited.

If you intend to fulfill orders using a drop shipper, you must always:

- Have an agreement with your supplier that they will identify you (and no one else) as a seller of your products on all packing slips, invoices, external packaging, and other information included or provided in connection with the products ~~Be the seller of record of your products;~~
- Remove any packing slips, invoices, external packaging, or other information identifying a third-party drop shipper prior to shipping the order ~~Identify yourself as the seller of your products on all packing slips and other information included or provided in connection with them;~~
- Be responsible for accepting and processing customer returns of your products; and
- Comply with all other terms of your seller agreement and applicable Amazon policies.

~~Failure to comply with these requirements may result in the suspension or removal of your selling privileges.~~
